This is prompted widespread road closures, power outages, and high avalanche risks across the Sierra. Another cold front will bring additional snow and rain this weekend ahead of drier and continued cooler than normal temperatures across the state.

WEATHER KEY POINTS

01/01/22 - 01/07/22

Saturday-Friday

- Colder than typical temperatures are expected through the weekend, with nighttime temperatures remaining 10 to 20 degrees below normal
 - A minor warming trend is expected for early-to-mid work week; while some temperatures may remain below normal for early January, most valley locations will no longer see impactful freezing temperatures after Monday
- Astronomical high tides through early next week are some of the highest of the year, which could lead to some coastal flooding
 - Tides will peak near 8.81 feet at Humboldt Bay on Sunday and Monday. This combined with strong south winds along the coast could bring significant coastal flooding to areas around Humboldt Bay and possibly on Highway 101 on the south side of Crescent City
 - High tides will remain above 7 feet across the Bay Area Saturday through Monday and could result in localized coastal and shoreline flooding in low lying areas
- Weak Santa Ana winds are expected Saturday and Sunday, with another round of weak Santa Ana winds possible Wednesday and Thursday
- Another round of rain and mountain snow will return to northern California on Sunday, and could spread south into central California Monday and Tuesday
 - Additional heavy precipitation and areas of gusty winds are possible with this next storm, however recent forecast trends have kept much of the heaviest precipitation further north into Oregon or far northern California
 - Winds will increase across far northern California starting Saturday, with the strongest gusts expected late Sunday through Tuesday
 - Tree/power line damage is possible, and blowing snow could lead to visibility and travel impacts
 - Debris flow threat from rain on snow low at this time given forecast precip and water content of snow in foothills
